

Attachment Disorder Support Group

Parents of children with Attachment Disorder have a tough job. Traditional parenting approaches usually don't work. People outside the family don't understand. They blame parents for their kids' problems and they often are not able to offer any helpful solutions.

Parents need somewhere to get help and support. In the spring of 2009, an Attachment Disorder Support Group was formed to meet this need in the St. Louis area.

Meeting the third Thursday of each month in West St. Louis County, the group serves families who are parenting children of all races and abilities. The Attachment Disorder Support Group is a place where parents can feel supported and heard, learn more about the causes and treatment of Attachment Disorder, and network about available resources.

Join us and learn that you're no longer alone and finally understood.
